What to expect

Companies in the financial sector are subject to increasingly stringent regulation. As a result, it is becoming more and more difficult for them to stay up to date and comply with laws and regulations. For most companies, this represents a major organisational challenge: breaches and infractions have a lasting impact on corporate reputation and represent an enormous operational risk. Compliance has become an essential factor in risk management and should be perceived as a company-wide responsibility. To cope with the increasing complexity of national and international regulations affecting compliance, compliance officers are in urgent need of consistent, high-quality training.

Ideal for

This course targets officers and managers working internationally in the fields of compliance, fraud, anti-money laundering, auditing, risk management and prospective compliance functions.

Organisation

The European Certified Compliance Professional (ECCP) course aims to provide participants with the knowledge and skills they need to deal with current compliance risks and challenges.
