

Eligibility for university studies in Germany for holders of a International Baccalaureate Diploma

To study at a university in Germany you need to be eligible according to German law. If you do not hold a German "Abitur" you have to fulfil certain requirements determined by the authorities. This process is not under the responsibility of Frankfurt School. We will, however, guide you through the necessary steps.

Holders of an International Baccalaureate Diploma (IB) are eligible if they fulfill the following criteria:

1) You need to have at least 12 years of progressive full-time schooling.

2) Among the six IB examination subjects are:

- Two languages: one of which one needs to have been taken continuously as "Language A" (from 2013: "Language A: Language and Literature" or Language A: Literature) or "Language B HL"; one language has to be the mother tongue; the second language must be a continued language from the previous school; a language "ab initio" is not recognized as a full language
- Mathematics / Natural science:
 - HL "Analysis and Approaches" or "Applications and Interpretation" plus SL Biology, Chemistry or Physics or
 - SL "Analysis and Approaches" or "Applications and Interpretation" plus HL Biology, Chemistry or Physics
- one of the following: History, Geography, Economics, Philosophy, Social Anthropology, Business and Management, Global Politics

3) The sixth examination subject may be one of the above or:

- | | |
|---------------------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| • any other modern language | • General Chemistry |
| • any other language "ab initio" | • Latin |
| • Applied Chemistry | • Literature and Performance |
| • Classical Greek | • Music |
| • Computer Science | • Psychology |
| • Design Technology | • Theatre |
| • Environmental Systems and Societies | • Visual Arts |
| • Film | • Sports exercise and health science |
| • World Religions | |

4) One of the three subjects studied at higher level has to be Mathematics, Biology, Chemistry or Physics.

5) All subjects have to have been studied continuously throughout the Diploma Programme on the same level (standard or higher). Students need to have at least grade 4 (satisfactory) in each of the six subjects. If only one of those subjects is graded with 3, students may compensate by having one other subject graded with at least 5.

6) Classes must have taken place in all subjects in classroom teaching. Only the mother tongue may have been taught in online lessons if the school does not offer this language as a face-to-face lesson.

If you fulfil these requirements, you are eligible to study at a German university. Should you not fulfill these requirements, you may be eligible to complete the Frankfurt School Extended Assessment Centre. You can apply online and the Admissions Office will provide you with feedback on the best course of action.

Students who have completed the IB Certificate are not eligible for direct entry into a Bachelor programme, however, they may be eligible to complete the Foundation Year.
